FOCUS: IT AND DIPLOMACY

21 / WIRING STATE: A PROGRESS REPORT

Once a technology laggard, the State Department has become an innovator. But the pace must be sustained to truly transform diplomacy.

By Joe Johnson

29 / THE SUN, THE WORLD AND RFID

The technology behind e-passports promises to dramatically streamline the global movement of people and goods.

By Emily Sopensky

36 / IT COMES OF AGE IN THE MIDDLE EAST

The information revolution is creating a new generation in the Middle East that will likely, but not necessarily, be more democratic.

By Jon B. Alterman

43 / DEFENDING STATE AGAINST ONES AND ZEROS

A complete security strategy must embrace not only robust physical safeguards but also complementary cybersecurity measures.

By Steven E. Roberts

FEATURE

51 / AFGHANISTAN'S TROUBLED PAST AND UNCERTAIN FUTURE

To understand how Afghanistan was transformed into a breeding ground for terrorist attacks on the West, and to help it get back on its feet, we need to know something of its bloody history.

By Arthur Lezin
